

Facts about reflectors

A reflector is a simple and effective life insurance if you choose one that works! There is a huge difference between good and bad quality reflectors. Naturally, you want the product you buy to be of the highest quality and approved according to the legal standards. For personal reflectors, this standard is called EN 13356.

The following information is to give you an understanding of these standards. This should help make your decision easier when it comes to purchasing reflectors. Hanging reflectors are classified as a safety product and should therefore fulfill a number of criteria before they are approved.

To be approved according to CE/EN 13356 the following criteria must be met:

- The reflector must have a reflective surface area of at least 15cm²
- The reflection value must be greater than 400 CIL
- The reflector must be supplied with information to the buyer about the certifying institute, the certificate number as well as care instructions.

At www.ntf.se you will find more information about approved suppliers of reflectors.

The reflective material available on the market today is of very varied quality. A reflective material with poor reflective values requires a product with a larger reflective surface area.

Facts about Popomax

Popomax was founded in 2002 by Kersti and Ewa. In 2003 they launched their first range of reflectors onto the market. Our trademarked Glimmis reflectors quickly became popular and Popomax has continued to grow. We are very proud that Glimmis has made it fashionable and fun to wear a reflector which in turn saves lives.

We design ourselves and produce our products in Sweden which means that we have a fast, flexible and reliable production of reflectors of a very high quality. Today we have over 100 designs in our selection and can even produce bespoke designs to suit a unique event, business or other target group.
